Open source licensing

- Open-source =.. source code is freely available.
  - Does not mean that anyone can do as they wish with that code.

- Developer (company or individual) still owns the code and can... give it a legally binding license.

- Carefully consider the license of all components being used in a system.
  - Ex: File-system, network "stacks", audio decoders, etc.

License models

- GNU General Public License (GPL)
  "Reciprocal" license, "copyleft", "Viral open source"
  - If your program includes any GPL code, then.. you must license your software under GPL.

- GNU Lesser General Public License (LGPL)
  - If you statically-link to LGPL code, it too must be LGPL
  - If you dynamically link to the code (like a DLL), it need not be LGPL (could have any licence).

- Berkley Standard Distribution (BSD) License
  - Non-reciprocal license... need not publish changes.
  - Code may be included in proprietary systems that are sold for profit (closed-source).

Simplified BSD License

GPLv3 License Details

- It's copy-left or "viral" open source. Ex:

  Section 5. Conveying Modified Source Versions
  c) You must license the entire work, as a whole, under this License to anyone who comes into possession of a copy. This License will therefore apply, along with any applicable section 7 additional terms, to the whole of the work, and all its parts, regardless of how they are packaged. This License gives no permission to license the work in any other way, but it does not invalidate such permission if you have separately received it

Copyleft Licences
